This Week in Labor History:

On May 29th, 1941, Disney cartoonists went on strike to demand of better pay (esp. improved profit-sharing arrangements) and recognition of their union, the Screen Cartoonists Guild. After several weeks without a resolution, the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt sent in mediators, who ruled in favor of the animators. According to a Hollywood Reporter retrospective on the strike, “If there was one thing the action demonstrated, it's that cartoonists make the best picket signs: One had Mickey Mouse holding a placard that said, 'Are we mice or men?' ”

Respectfully,

Your LBCCFA Executive Board
